

Toras Avigdor

Junior

Adapted from the teachings of Rav Avigdor Miller z"l

By: Ari Ben-Ami

Illustrations by: Yocheved Nadell

פְּרִשְׁת אַחֲרֵי - קְדָשִׁים

How We See Others

Sponsored by:

Mark (Mordechai) Weinman

In honor of his birthday, and as a zechut for Klal Yisrael

How We See Others

The brrrrrrinnnnng of the school bell was like music to Yitzky's ten-year-old ears. He was thrilled to be back in school after what seemed like years of trying to listen to his rebbi talk over a staticky phone connection. With his backpack bouncing on his shoulders and his fancy new frisbee in his hand, he actually ran to the classroom, excited to be around his friends again and to learn "normally" again.

As he ran down the hallway, though, he suddenly stopped. Who is that new boy walking into his classroom? And why is he wearing maroon-colored pants? "Oy, what a nebach," thought Yitzky. "I can tell just by looking at him that he's not going to fit in with us. I mean, did he actually choose to wear pants like those? That's so weird"

Yitzky shook himself out of his thoughts as he noticed his rebbi approaching and he quickly walked into the classroom and sat down in his seat.

"Welcome back, everyone," began Rabbi Caplan. "And I'd especially like to welcome a very special new member of our class." All eyes turned to the new boy as Rabbi Caplan said, "Everyone say hi to Yaakov Kehos Raskner, who just moved here from Manchester, England!"

"Kehos??" thought Yitzky. "What kind of name is that?"

As if reading Yitzky's mind, Rabbi Caplan continued: "I love that you use both names, Yaakov Kehos. Kehos was one of the sons of Levi, and his family was known for being the ones who carried the Aron in the Midbar — something that only the purest of tzaddikim could do."

"What???", thought Yitzky. "Not only did his parents give him such a funny middle name, but he actually uses it. He's definitely not going to be one of my friends...."

It was hard being back in a classroom after so long and Yitzky barely heard anything his Rebbi said all morning. As soon as the recess bell rang he ran outside with his shiny green frisbee to play with his friends, being careful not to even look at Yaakov Kehos.

“Wow!” said El’e as he caught the frisbee from Yitzy and threw it towards Ruvy. “This is the best frisbee I’ve ever seen!”

“I know,” said Yitzy. “I got it for afikomen. It even came with a booklet, with tips on how to ...” Yitzy’s voice trailed off as he saw the new boy walking toward them. “Hi, chevra! You mind if I join you?”

“Sure, Yaakov Kehos!” shouted Ruvy as he caught the frisbee. “Catch!”

Yitzy looked on as the frisbee glided from Ruvy and Yaakov Kehos effortlessly jumped high in the air with his arm outstretched to snag the spinning disc. Yitzy was speechless.

“Wow!” said the entire group of boys. “What a catch!”

“Thanks,” said Yaakov Kehos, as he turned to Yitzy with a smile. “Yitzy, right? What a brilliant flying disc you have there. And you throw it quite well, I must say!”

Stunned, Yitzy hurriedly smiled and mumbled thanks. This boy’s friendliness had definitely caught him off guard.

Just then the bell rang again. As the boys were walking breathlessly back to class, Yitzy heard someone say, “Yaakov Kehos, are you named after your grandfather? My father was telling me about him the other day; how he did so much for Klal Yisroel and how he even once flew to Washington DC to convince a Senator not to draft yeshiva bochurim into the US Army!”

Yitzy was so lost in thought that he didn’t realize he had stopped walking to the classroom, until he suddenly heard his rebbi’s voice.

“Yitzy, is everything okay?” asked Rabbi Caplan. “You don’t seem like yourself.”

“Honestly, Rebbi,” Yitzy whispered, “I’m really embarrassed. I thought I was a smart kid. And I know I’m supposed to like every Yid and everything, but when I saw how the new boy was dressed and heard his name and his funny accent, I was sure I wouldn’t like him. But then I started to get to know him and I see how great he is! He’s super friendly, comes from a special family, and he catches a frisbee better than anyone I’ve ever seen! I can’t believe I’m so stupid!”

Rabbi Caplan smiled as he put a hand on Yitzy’s shoulder. “Yitzy, you’re not stupid! You’ve actually made a mistake that the Torah says even the smartest of people, the dayanim of the Sanhedrin, might make. That’s why in this week’s parsha, Hashem has to warn dayanim to judge people accurately. Because even the most intelligent people can be fooled by their first impressions of people, by how they look and what they wear.

“That’s why the Torah tells us: ‘Wait! Ignore the chitzoniyus and look inside the person! Look at his maylos and see what he’s really about!’ Rav Avigdor Miller says that when you look at another Yid, the first thing to do is not to guess who he is and try to figure him out, but to look for his good middos, and say, ‘Ah, what a wonderful Yid!’ Everybody has something good about them!

“Even if the only thing you can see is that he wears a yarmulke, the thought you should have is ‘He’s my brother!’ and you should be excited about him!”

Yitzy looked thoughtful for a second, and then smiled. “Thank you, Rebbi,” he said. “I don’t think I’ll ever look at another Yid the same way again!”

Wishing Everyone a Happy and Healthy Shabbos!

© Copyright 2020, Toras Avigdor

For sponsorship opportunities please call: 732.844.3670